Dear Sir,

As per the decision taken in the Research Board meeting (30th April 2014) on agenda item 1(a) and subsequent approval in the 15th Academic Council (31.07.2014) by way of confirmation of minutes of the Research board, the following flexibly may be offered in the arrangement of classes for the course work of Part Time Research Scholars at the convenience of the course instructor(s):

Primarily looking at the difficulty faced by the Part Time Research Scholars (who are not working within 50 Km radius of the institute) in taking long term leave for the entire semester to attend the course work classes, the course work may be arranged by the concerned course instructor(s) by way of arranging extra classes to complete the course in minimum of total six weeks contact period. However, there shall be a gap of two weeks after continuous classes of two weeks duration throughout the semester. Thus the actual course work shall span over the entire semester. The gap period shall be utilized by the Research Scholar to solve the assignment problems and discussion/clarification related to the course work with the course instructor. For each course work imparted in such mode there shall be at least six classes per week. Hence, over the six weeks duration it shall total up to minimum 36 classes for each course work. For those Part Time Research Scholars for whom such arrangement is tenable the condition for the entire semester leave from the employer may be relaxed and such Research Scholars are required to take leave only for the actual dates of their classes (minimum is six weeks).

As such an arrangement of the classes depends completely on the availability of the time for course work's instructors; therefore decision to impart the course work in the above said manner lies solely with the course work instructor. In no case it can be exercised as a matter of right by the Research Scholar and be made precondition while seeking admission to the PhD programme.
